SUMMER FINERY

Some Hints From Paris for the Up-To-Date Girl.

The Handkerchief Dress—Wonderful Creations Which Have Come Across the Water to Adorn the Seashore Girl of 1900.

The Summer girl need have no fear of calling up reminiscences of what has been the vogue in previous seasons in her fashionable attire if the evidences of the styles from which she has to choose this year may be taken as a standard. These evidences of the latest creations of the dressmaker's art and of the toll of nimble fingers are well shown in a consignment which arrived in Baltimore yesterday and was deposited in the show rooms of a well-known Charles street modiste. To the masculine mind the gowns are simply wonders of silks, cloths and filmy laces. To the feminine mind they are the yeast of envy, working through admiration to the end in a desire to possess the marvelous French creations.

For the woman who wants a gown for house-wear which will combine comfort with that certain appearance of being well dressed which is so dear to the heart of woman, the French designers have evolved a skirt which has all the appearance of a regularly lined garment, but is nothing of the kind. It is the merest shell as it were, has no foundation under the Persian taffeta in the one which is shown, except an 18-inch ruffle of pink silk, at the bottom of which a glimpse may be caught as my lady walks around the room. The skirt is plain except for three stitched puffs at the bottom. The waist which goes with this is comfortable looking. The yoke and collar of tuck and hemstitching, and the sleeves are in one piece, sloping gracefully from the shoulders around the neck. In the front it breaks open over a white taffeta vest, narrow Persian-red velvet revers giving it a touch of color.

A DRESS FROM HANDKERCHIEFS.

Probably the greatest novelty of the early summer season is the handkerchief dress, as it might be called. It is not made of one handkerchief, but of a dozen or more bordered affairs, with which is combined material by the yard of the same general design. One of the prettiest of these which was shown is a blue taffeta with a white dot. The front of the waist is formed of one handkerchief with a corner drawn to a point in the center, two corners being drawn around to the back and forming the belt at the back. Over each shoulder is drawn one of the bordered handkerchiefs, the corners meeting in a loose sailor knot in front. The border of the handkerchief is carried over the shoulder again in the cuff, which falls over the hand to the knuckles. This great length of sleeve is a feature of all the summer gowns. A yoke of duchess lace forms the top of the corsage with a lace collar falling over the border of another handkerchief, which forms its stock foundation.

The skirt of this gown is in seven panels, a box plait of the silk by the yard intervening between each handkerchief, which ends in double rows of the border with three overlapping scallops.

Another taffeta gown has graduated polka dots, white and black, beginning in tiny specks at the waist line, continuing in wavy line of gradually increasing dots to the bottom. The skirt is cut in the circular form, but to give it the skirt cut out behind, and replaced by a veil of white chiffon. The bottom ends in a flare of scallops, with the lace set in over the chiffon.

The waist to go with the skirt has broad revers, similarly slashed and filled in with hemstitching and lace. It fastens in the left side with a Marie Antoinette bertha over a white chiffon vest. A lace collar and the complete costume.

FOR OUTDOOR WEAR.

A black cloth walking gown is elaborately embroidered with designs in blue, black and gold. The skirt is tucked over the hips with tabs sewed on of blue cloth, embroidered in black and gold. The bolero jacket has a border of the same embroidery and is fastened with embroidered loops, a lace tie making a graceful effect at the neck.

A white mouseline waist, much tucked and lace trimmed, is shown to be worn with this suit. On it is shown one of the new slides or catches for the voluminous lace or silk ties which are drawn through them. These are of gilt, bright or oxidized silver, usually in filigree design, and encircle the tie, allowing it to be drawn in loose folds about the neck. With them come the pendants and clasps for finishing ends of silks and ribbons. Whenever there is a silk end it is drawn into one of the metal pendants, which come in various designs of gilt and silver, or of the material of the dress.

In the cloth gowns as in the others are seen the cut-short sleeves, which bring up memories of the days of long ago. Ending at the elbow or just below the sleeves are worn that way or
